Said He Was Myers's Son.

The Comptroller's Name Used by a Fighting Swell.

Discharged in Court Before the Opposition Was Learned.

Two young men in evening dress, each with a party of friends, going in opposite directions, met under the electric light in front of the Hotel Marlborough at 12 o'clock this morning, and immediately began to fight. They were about evenly matched, physically, and at first they used their fists, and then their canes came into play. At last a quick, sharp blow opened the scalp of one of the combatants, and his assailant ran away.

He did not get far, however, for Policeman Barry, of the West Thirtieth street station, who saw the crowd, came running down just as the other fellow started to run up Broadway, and arrested him.

The man whose head was cut was staggering to his feet as Barry with his prisoner pushed his way through the crowd and made his arrest.

At the same house the young man gave their names as Harry Shepard, twenty years old, of 125 Broadway, and August Myers, twenty-one years old, of the St. James Hotel, who had declared in several times at the station-house the innocence of Sergt. Halpin and the reporters, that he was the son of Comptroller Myers. The boy, who is said to be a black man and is interested in a plot which he made at Fort Lee, where Shepard is now employed as a sheet writer with a book.

Young Myers accused the latter of the basest ingratitude. He says he helped Shepard financially, and that Shepard "threw him over" because he did not think he was his son.

At the same house the young man, who had declared that he did not think he was his son, was the son of A. Garson, a cigar dealer of 125 Sixth avenue, to half the name, man out of work.

The friends of Shepard, including Patrick Power, a saloonkeeper at Thirtieth street and Sixth avenue, to half him out.

Both men made counter-charges of assault at the station-house, while their friends, for the moment, sat silent.

At the St. James Hotel the proprietor was out of town, and the clerk in charge said he knew Myers as a relative of the Garsons, and declared that he did not think he was his son.
